

Buried Bones

One man struggled to build a house in a village in one specific spot multiple times. He bought property, a big one, and after he had gotten all the necessary license he started to build the house. Since the mere beginning of the building, some strange problems occurred: a flood in the backyard, materials suddenly got missing, the fence around the house corroded all at once.

After the house had been finished and his family had moved into, the problems got even bigger. In one gloomy and cloudy day, all of the sudden something exploded near the house. When they got outside to see what had happened, they saw a tree felt apart. That was not all. The next day during the storm, a lightning hit the roof and severely damaged it. During the other night, several windows unexpectedly got shattered. The man and his neighbors haven't got a clue what happened.

Then, one day, one elderly man from the village came by and told the owner of the house that the place was cursed. He explained it that a long time ago some people had a confrontation because of gold and one of them got killed. It was suspected that he had been buried there in his property, but he was never found. When the man entered his house later, he heard some strange noise in the basement. He decided to descend there. All at once an earthquake happened, and a part of his basement crushed and got cracked. And out of basement holes, skull and bones came up. The man got petrified and almost fainted. Once he recovered he went up and told his family to immediately call a priest and get out of the house. After the bones had been removed and buried in a proper graveyard, and the house had been cleaned from the evil spirits by a priest, everything got back to normal. No problems, noises and damages at the house happened since that day.
